About child criminal exploitation

Child criminal exploitation is the manipulation, coercion and control of children and young people to commit crimes, usually for the benefit of abusive adults or peers.

Locally we know of young people being used or paid to:

- Hide, carry or sell drugs, phones, computers or weapons (also known as county lines)
- Look after buildings / grows / houses

Vulnerability of young people

We have seen harm and distress caused to young people, parents and communities, often, but not always, affecting the most vulnerable. Our aim is to ensure parents and children are educated, know what to look for and where to access support and information.

They often don't understand the risks they are taking, because they are children, which is one of the reasons why exploiting children is unacceptable.

All children and young people are vulnerable because of their age, inexperience, immaturity and brain development.

Exploitation

noun The act of using someone unfairly for your own advantage

Offenders often recruit young people to help them increase profits from their offending and reduce their own chances of being caught by putting the risk onto others.

> Other young people can and do recruit their peers.

Young people often don't accept or recognise they are being exploited, thinking it's their choice, but also don't like to tell people due to:

- The risk of being caught and arrested
- because they have mistaken loyalty to the exploiter
- because they are scared for themselves or their friends or their family
- Because they think they need the money or they think they can get rich quick
- Because the risks are presented as exciting by the abuser
